The State debt question is in a bad condition. The report of the committee last Saturday has done much harm, which, I fear, will not be counteracted even by Mr. Clapp's minority report, which is regarded by all as very able. What can we pay? We think the amount to be paid should be measured by our ability, and that in truth this is the only question to be considered. The settlement or compromise of our debt upon this ground will leave no stain upon the State, but to force a settlement by denying the debt, it seems to us, cannot be justified without the clearest proofs that the bonds are void.
